IMPRISONMENT

The defendant is committed to the custody of the United States Bureau of Prisons to be imprisoned for a total term of 12 months and 1 day.

The Court recommends that Immigration and Customs Enforcement begin removal proceedings during service of sentence.

Defendant Juan Carillo-Romo's offense level is 17, and his criminal history is category I. His advisory guidelines sentence range is 24 to 30 months. The Court has considered the guideline range established for the applicable category of offense committed by the applicable category of defendant. The Court has also taken into consideration other sentencing goals. Specifically, the Court has also considered the factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(1)-(7).

The Court believes that a sentence of 12 months and one day reflects the seriousness of the offense that Carillo-Romo has committed and will promote respect for the law, provide just punishment, and afford adequate deterrence. While the sentence varies from the suggested range under the Sentencing Guidelines, it is a more reasonable sentence and more faithfully promotes the sentencing goals Congress laid down in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a).

Carillo-Romo is now in his forties, while his only felony conviction came when he was twenty-nine. Given that so much time has passed since Carillo-Romo has committed a serious offense aside from the one for which he is being charged today, it appears that he is a different and more mature person than he was at the time he committed the drug-offense. Thus, the offense that is raising his offense level to a relatively high number is part of a past that Carillo-Romo has left behind. Aside from his misdemeanor illegal entry and the current offense, Carillo-Romo has had no other criminal incidents. A variance is therefore in order.

Furthermore, the temporal remoteness of Carillo-Romo's only felony offense suggests that, in many respects, Carillo-Romo has developed respect for the law in a general sense. The 12-month and one day sentence will be sufficient to instill in him respect for the specific law prohibiting illegal reentry. Finally, because Carillo-Romo's drug offense is far in the past, and because the only other offense on his record was a misdemeanor reentry, he is not a danger to the public.

A sentence within the guidelines range would be excessive here and would contravene Congress' command that courts impose sentences that are sufficient but not greater than is necessary to comply with the purposes of punishment set forth in the Sentencing Reform Act. The Court recognizes the seriousness of the offense Carillo-Romo committed, but believes that a sentence of 12 months and one day sufficiently takes that crime into account. A longer sentence would be unnecessarily punitive and would not serve any useful purpose. The sentence the Court imposes varies from the guidelines, but in these circumstances such a sentence more effectively promotes the goals outlined in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a).
